

TRANSITIONING TO INDEPENDENT COLLEGE CONSULTING

Wednesday, September 29, 2010
St. Louis, Missouri • 8:30 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.

A Full Day Training Institute In Private College Consulting

One Day Prior to the start of the NACAC Conference

This one-day training is especially designed for school-based college counselors and college admission representatives considering a transition to private practice. Whether it's a mid-career change or plans for post-retirement work, this full-day institute will provide you with the tools to make the transition.

Sponsored by the Independent Educational Consultants Association and the National Association for College Admission Counseling

TRANSITIONING TO PRIVATE PRACTICE

School-based college counselors as well as university-based admission counselors possess a wealth of knowledge, have developed a valuable network of professional colleagues, and have unique insight into teenagers' hopes, fears, and worries about college and the admission process. Many counselors also struggle under growing case loads allowing even less time for ever-increasingly involved student and family needs.

As the field of educational consulting has grown into a significant profession, more and more institutionally-based counselors have considered the career. What holds many back is concern over opening a small business—how to take their extensive experience and knowledge and use it in private practice.

IECA has created this workshop specifically for those who are currently in a school or college setting and are contemplating such a move: how to market a new professional office, how to set up a small home or office-based business, how ethics, counseling services, and credibility issues change, and how to write a "Transition Plan" to guide you through the process.

THE INDEPENDENT EDUCATIONAL CONSULTANTS ASSOCIATION

No one knows more about private college counseling than IECA. Now 34 years old, IECA has been recognized by the media, by groups such as NACAC, and college admission officers as the nation's preeminent association for private counselors. Harvard University's William Fitzsimmons recently called IECA "the Harvard of Educational Advisors."

IECA's four-day Summer Training Institute for those entering the field (taking place on the campus of Swarthmore College, PA in 2010) is widely recognized as the finest training opportunity in the profession. IECA's college tours, national conferences, and outreach events are widely anticipated and praised. And IECA's ethics and professional practice requirements make us the leader, not only in training but also in establishing standards for the profession.

As further evidence of the respect our programs have received, NACAC has arranged for our training program to be part of the formal pre-conference events at the NACAC National Conference since 2006.

"This was a positive introduction to an exciting venture and organization."

EXPERIENCED FACULTY

Session leaders have been carefully picked from among the nation's most experienced and successful educational consultants. Faculty members are regarded as particularly knowledgeable about the area they will present. Each has made the successful transition from an institutional setting to private practice—so they understand your concerns.

TIMING IS PERFECT

IECA has scheduled this event to coincide with the NACAC National Conference in St. Louis, Missouri. The NACAC Conference opens Thursday, allowing you to complete the Transition Training and then move on to the opening of the NACAC Conference. NACAC has held rooms at several St. Louis hotels for those who wish to arrive early for this Institute.

REGISTRATION

Registration for this Pre-Conference Workshop is conducted by NACAC through their 2010 National Conference Registration form, available at www.NACACnet.org or use the link from IECA Web site at: www.iecaonline.com/transitioning.html. Membership in NACAC or IECA is not required, and you may attend the workshop even if you are not registering for the NACAC National Conference that follows.

Special Requirements: Registrants with dietary restrictions or other special requirements are asked to include written requests with their registration.

"This is the best session I have ever attended at ANY conference. Sessions were 'meaty,' fast-paced, and stayed on topic."
